

Tips for Studying with Multiple-Choice Questions (HonAmHist)

- Read the question (prompt) carefully. DO NOT READ THE ANSWER CHOICES YET.
  - Circle important words like EXCEPT, as in “All of the following are true except...” or NOT, as in “Which of these is NOT....”
  - Underline important clues in the question, including time periods (“In the early twentieth century...”) or places (“In rural America....”)
- Before looking at the choices, mentally review all you know about the topic of the question.
  - If you do not know much about the topic, look it up in your text and notes or make a list of these items to review later.
  - If you do know the topic fairly well, you may now look at the choices.
- The four or five answer choices are usually organized as follows:
  - One choice is completely wrong. Usually, this choice is the opposite of the correct answer. Anyone with any knowledge of the topic should be able to eliminate this choice first.
    - Identify this choice first and explain (to yourself) why it is wrong.
    - If you cannot explain why any of the choices are wrong, make a note of this topic and study it again.
  - One or two choices are seriously flawed. A student with decent knowledge of the topic will understand why these choices are wrong.
    - Try to identify these flawed choices next. Explain (to yourself) why these choices are wrong.
    - If you cannot explain why these choices are wrong, make a note of the topic and the subject of the choices and study this again.
  - Finally, two choices may appear to be correct, but one is clearly a better choice than the other. A student who wants to succeed in Honors American History must understand the topic enough to see the difference.
    - Examine both of these choices and compare them. Do you see a flaw in either one? What is it that makes that choice wrong? Do you see something in one choice that makes it the best answer? Explain what that is.
    - If you cannot see why one choice is better than the other, go back to the question (prompt) and look for key words or phrases that might help you decide.
    - Then, look at the choices again. Is there a key word or phrase in either answer choice that might make one better than the other?
    - If you do not understand why one choice is better than the other, make a note of the topic and the subject of these two choices and study this again. Seeing the difference between these two choices is likely to be very significant to understanding this topic.
- After examining a question (especially practice questions), focus on the main point (idea, concept, fact, information, etc.) of the question and answer. Commit those main ideas to memory.
